Our 8-Step Guide for How to Write a Pro Blog Post

If you've spent any time on the internet, you're undoubtedly familiar with blog posts. After all, you're reading one right now. Blog posts are the individual entries that comprise a blog, the successor of a TV show or entries in a journal. Blogging can serve multiple purposes. For one, it's a great way to establish yourself as an authority on your area of expertise. It can also be an effective way to drive traffic to your website and educate people about the topics you're passionate about. Additionally, a blog is the perfect place to showcase your writing.

What is a blog post?

A blog post is a single piece of content published on a blog, a shortened form of the now-archaic term weblog, which is an online platform for publishing written content. A blog can be a section of a website or a standalone website of its own. The blog you're currently reading is an example of the former, while The Pioneer Woman is an example of the latter. Both are composed of blog posts, pieces of content that each cover a single topic and may (but don't have to) include images and video alongside the written content. Written content is a key component of a blog post. A YouTube channel isn't a blog because it's purely video—it can be considered a vlog, short for video log. Similarly, a feed of purely still images, like an Instagram account, isn't a blog. In the earlier days of social media, when platforms like MySpace and Live Journal dominated the scene, blogging and social media were much more intertwined than they are today. Now, they're largely separate, though many bloggers promote and cross-post their work on their social media accounts to drive traffic to their blogs and promote their personal brand.

I have used Tailwind CSS to create a responsive blog website. I have used flex to position the layout. All the requirements have fulfilled. Contact form data is stored in a csv file. I have faced a challenge to implement the social media sharing button and make it work. I also faced challenge to create featured post section. I have learned more about how the flexbox works in Tailwind CSS. As I have previous experience of tailwind css so I did not find that much difficulties.
